

use of the word - because its original meaning is a person heavily working in the factory - as such this profession is disappearing you might say that Czech or Europe is not the whole world - but it shows the tendency ... - so any other use of the word is more a metaphor - when we say i.e. cultural worker - its mere mockery - even when we say cultural laborer - its not much better, maybe homo faber - but its taking us somewhere totally different + loosening any social tension. Very similar the word class - it exists only when backed with the self-identification of the large group of people - which is also a question if it exists in these days...

To point to the enemy is exactly how the mechanism of subjugation starts to work: dividing, hating to “the other” – that is how nationalism is built-up, but actually that was the biggest problem of bolshevism as well (you will always find an enemy – the process is endless). That is truth – subjugation is not slave-like any more: instead of being forced to survive therefore to work for somebody it is modified into mechanism of survival by working for somebody – there is no direct forcing anymore in wage slavery. But if you are identifying yourself with subjugated – the point is – who you are when loosing the chains? The “worker” has much more potentiality – it means ability to produce. Workers’ demands are very simple – to get the right to control the production and its distribution. In the case of DAMTP – that is the production of meaning. Creation of subjugated meaning is creation of commodity in the form of symbols (art, culture, state and religious propaganda, advertising etc.) – that is what ger is	Yes, maybe it is a kind of a metaphor, but it's got content.

	How do we use this metaphor (the only tool we've got in this instance - language) so that we support and relate to the dis-possessed and exploited? While singing 'we are all prosti-tutes' to my course-mates and tutors I was going for the same	or symbols (art, culture, state religious propaganda, advertising etc.) – that is we should resist against. That is not truth that your production of meaning always was subjugated, so besides resisting the subjugation you have an ability to control the meanings you've had produced, to disrupt the false ones, and also to create new meanings. Another point is the question of solidarity – to point the enemy is the way to create the crowd of "subjugated" who dislike being like that...but they are remaining in the same mode of "subjugated" so long they remain a crowd. There is a big difference how to manipulate crowd and how to deal with organized strike. Crowd actually plays the role prescribed, but strike is about refusal from playing the roles (exception is the strike organized by official trade unions that are actually playing one of the state domesticated roles). The strike of just "subjugated" is impossible. Their rebellion – meaningless, so far they immediately will loose the self-organization – rebellion is effective only in a concert with wild-cat strikes and on the basis of self-organization on a workers' level.

There is no sense to play with words on the level of linguistics – meaning is beyond linguistics and disrupts it if its rules start to press. Worker is probably mostly and wide understandable word – no sense to change it into some vague cunning.

But there is one more category in different social levels of more or less "subjugated" – that is "privileged" (that is what unites at some prospective lumpen-proletariat, libido-proletariat and bourgeoisie).

It's crucial! the definition of psychic / semantic or value space (its definition still unclear) is something that has developed since the end of the age of divinity was published on the internet - the version distributed at the last art strike biennial I think refers to "letter - name - text - volume" - the latest texts by DAMTP refers to "letter - name - nation - class". Some of this theorizing relates to Object Oriented Programming in which sense perhaps 'object' is an alternative to 'subject'.

A collage of five black-and-white photographs from the 1967 Soviet film 'The Story of a Soldier'. The images depict various scenes: a close-up of a soldier's face; a landscape with a winding path through trees; a group of people in a field; a man in a uniform; and a scene with a plane flying over a city.

If you speak to your organization, then you see that capitalist society isn't composed of two fundamental classes, the owners and controllers of the means of production who subsequently live off the labor of a second class; those forced

Comrades,

In my opinion, you deny the existence of racism all over the world - you seem to stick to the illustration of a starving Ethiopian - and this issue for me seems more and more important, because it is of benefit to the bourgeoisie and strongly opposing socialism. People ARE being discriminated because of the skin colour, but by calling you white – the referring is about your thinking and rhetoric, rather than your skin colour. White people can think black, black people can think white, so on.

Where I differ from your positions I don't stick to the relation to the production ONLY. Where did the bourgeoisie come from? Was it not the Europe and its ideas of supremacy? Yes, we are all from Africa, but there were certain moments in history (and the ideologies) which we don't have any grounds to deny! Because it carries on!

I remember you said that Nazis are only stupid

The question of trade unionism and bargaining – all the means what lack the ultimate risk are hopelessly compromised...these kind of organizations becoming part of the cult rituals and tense pressure simulators what simply makes evidence that they are far away from the ordinary people, or simply they are linking towards deeper bourgeoisieification of the working people by offering some more privileges for the more obedient ones.

In general we as DAMTP's should admit that our aim consist not of trying to obtain some more privileges but about loosing those already gotten. Definitely it is an opposite direction from trade unionism and will do not fit with the desires of our colleagues towards the welfare life.

Simply – I do not see a possibility for socialism while there is a situation workers. Only? I think that's one of the crucial things: to not allow it happening! Often the racism, the nationalism might be left as unimportant, but that's the enemy as important as capitalist 'freedom' ideology, not to forget authoritarian left.

As I perceive it, proletariat is the class that is determined to abolish capitalism, that is the mentality, which does not equal ones relation to production, but the determination, the conscious interests taken into praxis. As was said before, the queen is welcome to resign (or whatever the term) and join DAMTP - she would be a perfect contributor to crack the royal occultism and to turn in on itself!!! Where we differ, I think, DAMTP is, as it is written in constitution, or even the title itself suggests, an organization for mental class war, instead of becoming politicians or creating a trade union which would institutionally fight for higher wages - so it is not intended for defense.

We can call the middle class a working class,

Comrades,

I found some typical Western hubris present in the notes defending class interest of the privileged group of people, denying the fact that racism exists as such. Making equation between privileged western bourgeoisie called "cultural workers" and the workers of the third world – that is nonsense. There is a big difference between such "workers' who are making a choice – to work or refuse from it for the rebel sake is not adequate to the question of survival what brings to the fight third world people (even counting eastern Europeans at some extend). As 60-ies showed more evidently – western white "revolutionaries" quite easy came back to "normalization", while for to the most black (and Latin-American) revolutionaries it was the question of life/death.

The question of trade unionism and bargaining – all the means what lack the ultimate risk are hopelessly compromised...these kind of organizations becoming part of the cult rituals and tense pressure simulators what simply makes evidence that they are far away from the ordinary people, or simply they are linking towards deeper bourgeoisification of the working people by offering some more privileges for the more obedient ones.

...you don't hear it from workers in Czech - they are not so much proud of their state - especially now when so easy to loose the job... + actually its doctors now who are on riot - about 4000 Czech doctors will leave the hospitals by the March 1st if the doctors trade union doesn't succeed to get form government what they have been asking for a long time (they made all the jurisdictional steps about 3 months ago) ... this is what is moving with the society now in this small country... so the Czech psychics workers are silent - but the psychic doctors are howling!

Comrades communists,

This is an open address to all your self-organized community throughout the entire globe.

We are addressing you because you're the first organization of psychic workers what really succeed to step beyond "whiteness" of eurocentrist culture and really involved into the "blackness" of planet earth.

We are addressing you as those who propagate and realize collectivity as general approach towards equality and freedom in society.

We are addressing you for your widely known declarations towards dehierarchization of culture and providing the source for the mad imagination and black humor what bursts from the inevitability and explodes into a convulsive beauty.

We are calling to join us in discussion and laughter (either physically, or in psychic) at our meeting of DAta Miners & Travailleurs Psychique what will happen August 22nd-28th, 2011 in Alytus (Southern Lithuania)

As having a branch of DEad WOrkers Union of DAMTP we address also all dead proto-orthodox-post-out-of-non-communists counting from Violette Nozière to Aimé Cesaire, or from Abd-el-Krim to Amadou Diallo to join us in a Psychic March of Death planned on those days & nights in the country what was described as nowhere in the last act of Ubu Roi by Jarry.

It was in the black mirror of anarchism that communism first recognized itself. Therefore it is a black mirror of communism that psychic syndicalism recognizes itself.

Lately, Presence Africaine has, unfortunately been too preoccupied with anthropological creepy crawlies to denote enough attention to the problem of the artist in his present predicament. It worried me a lot that such a useful institution did not seem to be aware of cultural cross-currents that characterize artistic expression in multi-racial societies. They seem to think that the only culture worth exhibiting was traditional or indigenous. And so they concentrated on countries where interaction of streams of consciousness between black and white has not taken place to any significant or obvious degree, or doesn't so much as touch the cultural subsoil. A number of these enthusiasts even became apologetic about the Western elements in their own art. Where do we come in – we who are detribalized and are producing a proletarian art? This is what I wanted to know. - Ezekiel Es'kia

Bourgeois culture is not about equality as it tends to manifest, but rather is producing the schisms inside the indigenous countries which were already communist in fact. That possibly explain why communism prevails in the countries of advanced capitalism.

Being an adept of communism in the third world means identification with western colonist culture while giving an impression of exotics and multiculturality to it.

Illusionary privileges to the newly established bourgeoisie made exploitation injected into a very body of proletariat and negritude as well.

myth, thereby excising political chicanery. Participants will not so much be inscribing their ideas on the palimpsest of an historic event, but will have to subject themselves to the much harsher discipline of projecting their conceptions

From the material so presented and reproduced by delegates, as appropriate, the full variety of activity will become apparent. It will then possible for task groups to emerge, directly relating to the intrinsic interconnections established by the First Congress, rather than the bureaucratic management of extrinsic connexions being implemented according to the interests of an executive, which has already established itself as a pole of separate activity. From the emergence of the task groups, whatever direct meetings such as are required by the nature of the work the task group has undertaken, will take place. This accords with our principle of minimum necessary activity. Although we espouse the warmth of comradeship, task groups are in no way akin to affinity groups, which seek to offer a psychological bolster to the individuals involved. Any such emergent affinity groups will be dissolved.

The following texts comprise initial accounts of the Congress, and are composed of conventional descriptions of the proceedings. We invite delegates to publish or otherwise manifest their accounts. The First Congress is already underway.

Partisan Review, which was once the pre-eminent journal of culture and politics in the United States, folded after 68 years of publication.

In Memoriam: Partisan Review By Norman Birnbaum

"Partisan Review, our most exciting and influential journal of culture and ideas in the '30s, '40s, '50s, and '60s, the journal that began in 1934 by calling for revolution in society and the creative destruction of tradition in the arts ended as one more voice of neoconservatism in politics, as a conventional defender of 'standards' in culture." Eurocentric domination has fixed limits in our current globalized society. A century ago, Europe was home to 25 percent of the world's population. Today, Europe holds about 12 percent of the world's population. Today, Eurocentrism is nothing more than a conceit within nostalgia for preeminence. White Supremacy is a dead dream, and thankfully the ugly dream world of Adolf Hitler are impossible today. And the grasp of a Jane Austen notion of high society – as there are new voices and visions to be reckoned with. China for example has by program created a new class of international elites.

In Western societies, Multiculturalism may still be regarded as kind of apocalypse. The residual effects of the global expansion (colonialism) of Western Europe up until the 20th Century reverberate within the Postmodern practices, which now endangers cultural grounding. Foreign presences not by the earlier appropriations of European artists, and cultures (of my ilk) that lack internal conflict brought about by a diverse citizenry, are not in the best position to move this debate forward - from an internal experience. An intellectual participation might suffice, but the only way for these societies to participate in the evolving human catastrophes is to understand themselves as individual and collective members of a globalized society.

Africa's Linguistic Prison

One of the many reasons why Africa lags behind the rest of the world is that it is still stuck in a very Eurocentric mindframe regarding language. Every virtually country in Africa has as its official language a European language, either English, French or Portuguese, depending on who the colonial power was. This means that African children receive their education in a language that is not their own, limiting their creativity and their overall understanding. As the Shona people of Zimbabwe would say, hatikwanise kubudirira tikasa shandisa mitauro wedu (we cannot progress if we don't use our own language). Africa is still very much under colonial rule, psychological colonial rule, and it is the language of the former colonial masters that represents the chains that must be broken...

The problem with the visual arts, as it struggles to represent itself as a cross-cultural phenomenon, is that those who control and associate the visual arts with elitist culture reject inclusion as a demon of miscegenation – and actively fight against it. Modernist Art is well known for disregarding the interests and values of the "uncultured" masses. This burgeoning Neo-conservative platform rejected the art of Social Realism after the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Pact of 1939, in favor of Abstract-Expressionism as an "individuals" free expression art form. In this same political aspect, Surrealism was represented. In that they also rejected Surrealist art out of a disdain for its most celebrated forms which were representative. In that smirched as a form of "kitsch" that pandered to middle-brow (proletarian) visual acuity.

In the critical treatise: "Anti-Oedipus: Capitalism and Schizophrenia," the French authors Gilles Deleuze and Félix Guattari supposedly criticized Western society's innate hard instinct, and the individual's unwillingness to be cut off from the (white) tribe. I read these texts as having the opposite intent – as a surreptitious hyperrealistic deceit, whereby the authors were actually advocating the strengthening of the herd instinct for self.

against social and cultural mongrelization, and therefore economic and political impotence.

The American art critic Clement Greenberg first made his name writing for the journal Partisan Review, where his most well-known essay, "Avant-Garde and Kitsch," was first published – at a time when he was more involved with literature than with visual art. In this essay Greenberg asserts that true avant-garde art resists the degradation of culture by populist tastes. He espoused a Modernism that maintained a fidelity to the "best" of the past (Europe), which he believed was the nature of an orientation that would insure standards and levels of aesthetic quality by emulating and living up to that past. For Greenberg, a multicultural America was not the ideal, and one does not have to be brilliant to know that when he speaks about the "past," he is not thinking of Native Americans or a pre-Columbian America. His philosophy consisted of a continuing endeavor to protect a "white" bourgeois society threatened by increasingly impoverished. In the United States, the middle class is being slowly dismantled piece by piece, as a continuing trend that is pushing more human beings into a perpetual struggle to survive.

The recent global financial scandals, and the plundering of common wealth by the Wall Street parasite class, have renewed the consciousness of class struggle. This systematic plundering of the global economy has left average people (proletarians) increasingly impoverished. In the United States, the middle class is being slowly dismantled piece by piece, as a continuing trend that is pushing more human beings into a perpetual struggle to survive.

Those in the top 5 percentiles of wealth are the only group that is growing their income. This increasing inequality gap, and the stark disparity between rich and poor, demonstrates that the current recession is actually widening the chasm between the working and upper classes.

Even among the intellectuals, most are unaware that the New York world of culture and art is the birthplace of the Neoconservative movement, and had been under its evolving grip for more than 60 years. The original Partisan Review was founded in 1934 as an out-growth of the Arts Club, the arts branch of the American Communist Party. But the magazine founded when its principal editors rejected the Moscow-dominated party line in both politics and culture.

Russian Constructivists and the German Bauhaus, in their Modernist delight, indulged themselves primarily in a euphoria stemming from the achievements of the Industrial Revolution. With the exception of some like the Impressionists, as it induced millions of youth across the land – into a spiritual rapture. To the young white ears this music was the opening wedge that made for a more receptive environment for the countercultures that would explode across the world in the mid-1960s.

No black artist has been formally associated with Surrealism in the Western art historical canon. Breton's friend with the black Cuban artist Wifredo Lam, was an exception. The African-American artist Hughie Lee Smith became known for a style of painting that infused Social Realism into a kind of atmospherically charged Surrealism. Bill Henson, another African-American artist, who lived for many years in Paris, did some amazing paintings that describe as "Cerebral Romanticism." These paintings are not logical but they are very recognizable. But here again, this art was not officially recognized as being about anything, especially Surrealism – which it was. Whichever one might want to recognize as black surrealists, one could also say that they would most likely support the idea of also codifying identity (ethnicity). Whether this satisfies the philosophical concept of "negritude" remains open for debate, while other revolutionary black artists evolving out of Social Realism, like Banny Andrews and Faith Ringgold, certainly argued for a more international proletarian approach.

In the African-American community, we live in a social-political paradox, in that we are Separatists and integrationists simultaneously. Historically, from the emancipation to the Civil Rights movement, African-Americans could be described as Integrationists. From the upheavals of the 1960s, and the Marxist inspired Black Power movement, American blacks could be described as Separatists. Thus, Integrationists vs. Separatists is now a defunct debate that took place during the late 1960s. It is true that blacks are pursuing separation in regards to establishing social and cultural institutions that they will control and influence independently (self determination). It is also true the blacks in America do not see themselves as a completely independent economic entity. They see themselves rather as a sector of the larger global economy, into which they demand integration. In the areas of the arts and culture, it is also true that blacks are establishing ideologies within the institutions that they create, control, and evolve on their own terms, while at the same time insisting on a representation within the "recognized" history of the art and culture of the nation - and the world. This dichotomy persists!

At this point though, I think it would be important to examine the motives of the Abstract-Expressionist Jackson Pollock. Pollock's conscious effort (like so many artists of "color") to step beyond the "whiteness" of Eurocentric culture gained recognition. While his connection to French Surrealism and the paintings of André Masson are unmistakable, and his Dada drips are both brilliant and amusing, what he is not known for is his sincere attempts at dehistoricization for André Masson. This was done while he placed and painted his canvases on the floor, to simulate the Asian tradition of Sand Painting that remained as a residue in the culture of the Native-Americans – who had migrated from Asia across the Bering Strait land bridge 10,000 to 15,000 years before.

The United States of America, with its cruel history of racism and psychiatry, served in a neurological hospital where he employed Sigmund Freud's psychoanalytic methods with soldiers suffering from Post Traumatic Stress Syndrome. The artistic style of Surrealism began as an official movement shortly after the artists were influenced by Freud's ideas of the conscious and unconscious mind. This is the conjunction, at which point Western Surrealism can be observed as having a direct influence from African Ritual. As a French writer and poet, Breton thus lands himself in the quandary that condemns most French modernists as cultural imperialists, giving that they feasted heavily on their rummaging through the cultures of their colonial possessions – particularly those in Africa. While the twined with "white Country and Western music. The words "rock" and "roll" were black slang for sexual intercourse, and was a raucous, exhilarating, and dangerous style of music for a multi-ethnic audience. This was the "Jungle Music" dismissed by the highbrow bourgeois critics, as it induced millions of youth across the land – into a spiritual rapture. To the young white ears this music was the opening wedge that made for a more receptive environment for the countercultures that would explode across the world in the mid-1960s.

Jungle Music events evolved into the 1960s Hard Rock concerts and Raves that mimicked a Western perception of African Ritual - a unified mind-body experience that causes endorphins induced hallucination and euphoria. Rock concerts with its throb-brisk-paced amplified music, psychedelic light shows, and drug induced hallucination, created a madness of trance as people danced "in" the music. These spectacles conjured in conservative minds – the specter of Dionysian infantilism run amok. There was this experience of anarchism moving towards revolution, exerting a constant pushing Travailleurs Psychique Inquiry, I must first fix in my mind what I think Reds/Dirrys means by "Surrealism" (as a political platform)? My best assessment is found in the politics of Dada - the mother of all surrealists. Dada art, as a protest against World War One, and the huge investment of science and intellect for the purposes of war and killing, sought to respect the intellect by not reducing its power, but instead by reversing its use, thereby deploying its power towards non instrumental purposes.

A study of Surrealism with a necessary depth is needed for a proper discussion here. In my case, I do know that the original surrealists were literary people, but before this writing, my basic knowledge of Surrealism was the automatic writings (paintings) of André Masson, and the representations of René Magritte or Salvador Dalí. What we seem to be dealing with in this case is a more potent brand of Surrealism – in terms of its links with politics through the advocacy of anarchism and socialism. In my Western (Post-colonial USA) education, mainstream writers and historians dismissed the serious politics of Surrealism and the more virulent strains such as Comte de Lautreamont's, while emphasizing its fanciful aspects and imagery.

Andre Breton's quote: "It was in the black mirror of anarchism that surrealism first recognized itself." A black man in the mind a fascinating image. But as a black man it is easy to get stuck on the use of the word "black" as further reflection is needed to recognize that in Europe (in those days) when the word black is used bad, it didn't originally refer to black people. But this whole notion of Surrealism that advocates for anarchism and revolution, in the context of the Western doctrine, has a great deal to do with black people – and the "Black Diaspora" especially.

I have always looked upon the phenomenon of Rock'n'Roll originated in the United States in the 1950s and has since spread to the rest of the world. White racists attacked and ridiculed Rock'n'Roll, as "Jungle Music," due to its African influences, and also because of the forbidden social mingling of black and white people it brought about. This mixing was seen as a taboo form of cultural miscegenation, as the audience and the musicians were often ethnically mixed. Despite these attacks, Rock'n'Roll prevailed as the defining musical style of America in the 1950s.

During World War Two, André Breton, who had trained in medicine and psychiatry, served in a neurological hospital where he employed Sigmund Freud's psychoanalytic methods with soldiers suffering from Post Traumatic Stress Syndrome. The artistic style of Surrealism began as an official movement shortly after the artists were influenced by Freud's ideas of the conscious and unconscious mind. This is the conjunction, at which point Western Surrealism can be observed as having a direct influence from African Ritual. As a French writer and poet, Breton thus lands himself in the quandary that condemns most French modernists as cultural imperialists, giving that they feasted heavily on their rummaging through the cultures of their colonial

"Feeling a bit stunned by the whole event. A board of 18 members lined up, in a historic room full of portraits. About 20 shareholders who were invited to ask any questions close to the beginning. I held onto the microphone until it was taken away from me asking:

- Following the death of Jimmy Mubenga can the board tell us what steps have been taken to ensure that no one else will be killed by G4S? -

Have the criticisms of the Inspector of Prisons been addressed regarding treatment of prisoners and detainees, especially children? - Why is G4S supplying services in illegal settlements in Israel including means to torture prisoners -Following union reports in Malawi, Mozambique and South Africa detailing the racist practices of G4S management and staff what has been done to address this?

Some of these points were answered by different board members. Most replies related to training of staff or the fact that G4S was following directions from UKBA etc. I pursued a number of points and one other shareholder mentioned that any adverse publicity potentially affected economic benefits

(!) When they voted to give themselves a pay rise from £750,000 to £1M I voted against (only one) and stood up and ranted how they were benefiting from the suffering of the individuals in their care and should be ashamed. I walked out. A horrible experience - like being in a circle of hell with no real human beings present!

Paul Condon (ex-London police guy), Nick Buckles (Chief Exec - with £7M pension at 52! all whitened smiles and spray tan). Row of greedy poisonous characters. Scary world!"

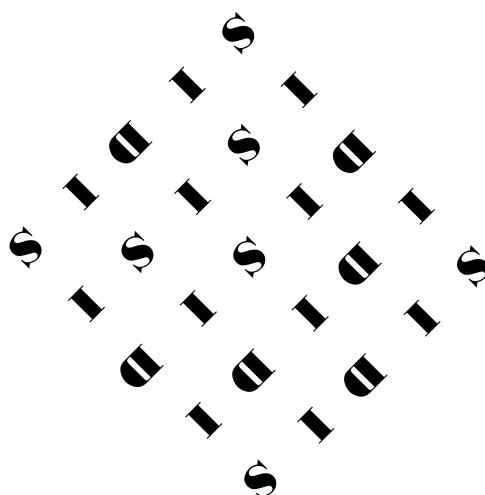

Future generations will marvel at how the United States in the twentieth century so effectively destroyed those who would supersede both the democratic forms of its constitution and that of the capitalist economy which had already subverted its structures. Faced with judicial murder of such activists as Joe Hill, many activists chose anonymity especially following the defeat of the international wave of struggle following the First World War. William Sidis was just such a person.

Sidis had a rude introduction to the Society of the Spectacle. At the age of eleven he was regarded as an infant prodigy. He delivered a lecture to Harvard professors on the Fourth Dimension. When word of this reached bars where local journalists would drink, they started his persecution: he was later to recall how he would be physically attacked by journalists with one holding him down while the other photographed him. Grub Street did not need Murdoch to teach them how to be abusive.

Born in 1989, the son of perhaps America's foremost psychiatrist, his story was projected into the newsphere by his father, and later his mother, who wanted to promote their views on child-rearing. At an early age he studied politics and economics and soon developed a socialist perspective. The boy savant could not understand what role money had except to deny people access to the things they need. By 1919 he had become an activist in the Communist movement, and was arrested for carrying a red flag on the May Day demonstration in Boston that year. His father managed to pull strings to get him released from the so-called "justice system" and kept him prisoner in the private sanatorium he ran. His political evolution was regarded as a psychological problem and he was drugged and terrorised by his mother. His parents threatened him with a one-way trip to the insane asylum if he did not conform. Escaped their clutches and avoided them for the rest of his life.

Like so many activists across the world, he soon realised that the regime being developed in Russia was not communist but just as much a perversion of the human desire for a fair society as the United States itself. He also continued his mathematical studies publishing The Animate and the Inanimate in 1925. Here he discusses the psychological aspects of the four dimensions and challenges the Second Law of Thermodynamics and was the first published account of black holes. The book passed unnoticed without a single review, and was only over fifty years later that the book got any recognition.

Sidis also wrote extensively on American History and in away which highlighted the role of Native Americans and the impact
